- The National Collegiate Athletic Association, which allowed student-athletes to earn money for their name, image, and likeness (NIL) amid mounting pressure starting last summer, is still working out how to determine what is and isn't allowed in the loosely regulated marketplace. The NCAA effectively told schools to follow school policy if one existed or state laws in the 28 states where NIL regulation laws exist.

- Deep pocketed sports books have been a boon to local media in the past year. BIA Advisory Services forecasts $1.6 billion will be spent by online gambling services on advertising in 2022, with local television getting the biggest piece of the pie at $570 million and $150 million going to local radio stations.
- While ad spending is essential to operators' efforts to attract and retain customers, investors are waiting for those expenditures to pay dividends. In the first half of the year, FanDuel spent $404 million on marketing and sales to generate $952 million in revenue. That's while rival DraftKings spent $399 million to drum up sales of $610 million.
- The gaming industry, including regulated sports wagering, spent $488 million on advertising between November 2020 and November 2021, according to Media Radar. Nearly $336 million, or 69 percent of the overall figure, was directed to television advertising — good for 63 percent year-over-year growth.
- Nielsen Ad Intel reports that sportsbook firms spent nearly $154 million in the first quarter of the year on local TV commercials. In Q1 of 2019, sportsbooks spent only $10.7 million on such spots.
